

from Guestbook . . .

Sarah Gudernatch

Lun, 23/07/2012 - 20:11 | E-mail

Sorry needed to add a few more things- we found out about Eco-Rent through our friends Braden & Brian who did the same trip a few years ago. The rental itself was really smooth! We brought our own seats but Daniele gave me an extra pad for mine and the bikes were fantastic. 24 speeds made it really easy to get up some of the giant hills and they were perfect hybrids for the trip! Eco-rent helped coordinate everything before we left - picking us up from the airport, handling all of our luggage transfers, booking our accommodation (in AMAZING places!), and delivered the bikes to us on time and just as described!

I honestly would recommend you take this trip so so much!
Sarah & Simon

Sarah Gudernatch

Lun, 23/07/2012 - 19:52 | E-mail

Our bike tour through Tuscany with Daniele and Eco Rent was completely incredible. My fiance and I did a 7 day tour starting in Calci and made our way through Volterra, Pomerance, Cassiana Terme, and so many other villages and towns. The villages were my favorite- so many medieval castles and churches to explore. My fiance loved the open country roads with hay stacks, sunflower farms, and rolling vineyards for miles. The tour was absolutely incredible. Each morning we would wake up and follow our map and there was an accompanying guide book that let us know what adventures we could have that day - what to see and get excited for. I would recommend not going in July as it was about 88 degrees F every day and was a bit too hot for me. Luckily Daniele came to my rescue twice and picked me up in the van when I just couldn't bike any more.

I would 100% recommend this tour and company for a completely amazing and memorable adventure!

Thank you!!

Sarah & Simon

www.ecorent.net/?q=guestbook

Guder Goes Green

Everyday Sustainability

A Leg-Powered Vacation

Posted on August 21, 2012 by sashahuder

I'm going to skip the 'sorry I took a few months off to travel, get engaged, get a new job, get a new apartment, etc post' and just jump right back in. Here's hoping you will too!

My (now) fiancée and I have been dating for 3.5 years and until just a few weeks ago, we had never been on vacation. This was primarily due to him starting a company and me going to grad school (thus one of us was always super poor), but also because we did long distance for almost 3 of those years. Since we were always hoping a bus (and then later a plane) to visit each other, going elsewhere wasn't in the cards. Due to the lack of fun trips together, we knew we had to really kick vacation's ass, and we wanted it to have an eco-component.

Well, our vacation kicked our ass (literally and otherwise), but it was truly awesome. We decided to bicycle our way through Tuscany Italy for an 8 day leg-powered adventure! We used a company a friend had recommended, EcoRent, who rented us the bicycles, helped plan our route, and even set up hotels, villas, and farmhouses in each destination spot. We started in Calcinaia and made our way to Casciana Terme, Volterra (no vampires encountered!), Pomerance, Castagneto Carducci, Pomaia, and Pisa -- and lots of towns in between!

We biked about 40 miles per day through medieval villages, vineyards, farmland, 10 person towns, and fell in love with the wine, the pizza, the people, the riding, and even more with each other. Experiencing a country on bike is really beyond words. You don't have a car window to block out the sounds, the smells, the HEAT, but you can still cover so much ground in a day. You truly get to SEE and FEEL the place you are visiting. We got to stop and do both an olive oil tasting and wine tasting at local farms! Due to the 90 degree days we had to wake up and get on the road by 6am, and were usually finished with the ride by noon. While much of the trip was simply magical, I did have two breakdowns -- one of which resulted in a lot of tears and throwing my bike into the woods, and the other resulted in me calling EcoRent to come bring me up the last 5km hill 😞 I think that's fair though given the conditions.

I would definitely do it again (although not in the heat of summer!) because it left me feeling so proud of my body. Our legs, lungs, hearts, and attitudes got us so far each day. It was also an incredible team-building activity as we learned the right ways to encourage and push each other; this definitely took a few days to figure out. Each morning it was me, my fiancée, two bikes, and a map and we had to get ourselves from A to B. It really felt like survival training as we had to focus on making sure we had enough food, water, and shelter when it became too hot.

While it wasn't completely energy-free (a diesel van moved our luggage from point to point along with other bikers' things doing similar trips), we ate extremely local, reused what we could, used the sun to dry out our laundry, and tried to keep our waste to a minimum. One of the best parts of Tuscany is that everything you find to eat is local. I did end up eating meat (and now I remember how good salami is!), cheese, and bread -- three things I don't normally eat, as there wasn't much of an option in the small towns (tofu does not exist there ha). But, it was delicious, and fresh, from the butcher down the street, and I felt good to be supporting the local economy. Since returning to SF I have also returned to vegetarianism but it was quite fun to eat like a local, I'll admit.

Biking through Tuscany!

More summer stories coming soon ☺

Categories

Select Category ▾

Follow Blog via Email

Follow

Follow me on Twitter

Thankful for technology while sick. Fiancée is gone so hired @sashahuder to bring me tissues and soup. Love living in SF. 27 minutes ago

Check out my article on what America's new demographics mean for #sustainability and #CSH. greenbiz.com/blog/2012/01/2... cc @greenbiztweets 31 minutes ago

Follow @gudergoesgreen

Recent Posts

- Find a green cleaning product, the easy way.
- Perhaps an eco baby gift?
- I'm in love with our new table.
- GreenBiz winners announced!!!
- Starting the Week Off Right: Q&A 1st Giveaway!

